And I can tell you another thing. In the next five years, if the city continues to grow, it will require as much for sewers as the system has already cost from the beginning to the present I me. Now, as to those pipes which empty into the bayou, I have known for a long time that the two lateral pipes along the bayou are too small. They are fifteen inches in diameter, which flows into the river. The east pipe has for some time been sutirely too small, while there has been a little roun to spare in the pipe on the other said of the bayou. The next plan considered was that of running a main pipe under the Mississippi and Tennessee road, along Elliot street, to empty into the river somewhere in Fort Pickering, but I discovered that it would be necessary to go deeper than to build a separate system and that the cost would be $10,000. It was out of the question to talk of laying larger pipes in place of the fifteen-inch lateral sewers, and using the latter until the work could be finished, on account of the network of touse connections. I suppose that in a hundred years we might pave the hundred miles of streets in Memphis, but we cannot afford to wait so long any effort to increase the tax would of course create a furore, and suppose the tax was quadrupled, it would even then be insufficient for the purpose of furnishing good streets as rapidly as we need them.
